

Assessing a Location:

Municipality Review

Once you've found that perfect location, make sure the restaurant your planning is allowed on the property. Most cities and towns have zoning restrictions that dictate how a property can be used. Don't sign a lease or purchase a property until you fully understand the restrictions. It is possible to get some restrictions changed but try to do that BEFORE you purchase.

Talk with the building official and/or planning staff at the local municipality as early as possible to confirm how your use will be classified and which zones allow it.

Municipal staff determine use by reviewing your proposed floor plan (cooking area, seating, bar area, parking requirements, etc.). Some relevant food service establishment types include:

- Restaurant: Full service restaurants, cafés, coffee shops, and delicatessens.
- Establishment with Liquor License: These are businesses that serve food, as well as, alcohol. These businesses must have a menu and may also have a bar. There are typically full liquor licenses or beer and wine licenses, and they may have extended hours.
- Caterer/Commissary: Or similar place in which food or drink is prepared for sale or for service on the premise or elsewhere.

Once you know what zoning and use classification you need for your restaurant, you can better evaluate potential properties.

Local Fire Code Review

Verify whether you'll need to install or upgrade the sprinkler system, the ancillary/exhaust system over the stove, etc. You may want to check with the municipality or local Fire Marshal. Permits may be required for installing or upgrading a sprinkler or fire alarm system. You may need to hire expert help in this area.

If the permitted use does not fit your need, you may have to apply for a land use permit to allow your use. Below are some of the permits and/or licenses you might need from the local municipality.

Each municipality treats these differently so check with the municipality where your business will be located. This is only a partial list, depending on your specific circumstances, there could be additional permitting or licensing needs.
